

The Bond Street Review

Summer
2018

From the editors ...

Hey, all, it's Eric writing a solo editorial this time out. We've had the cover image of a much-loved VW Bug for some time now, just sitting in the "images" folder, patiently waiting its turn. I'm a sucker for a visual metaphor and some days, I am positive that we all feel just like that Bug looks – dinged-up and scarred, rusted in spots, maybe convinced that we're well-past our best days. But the thing is this – even knocked around and faded, you can rest assured that that Bug still gets looks, still gets its share of attention, and still has more than its share of fire left in the tank once someone turns the ignition. Given the right circumstances, we all still do.

We hope that this issue ignites you as well and that you're not the least bit shy about sharing the issue and spreading the word far and wide. Hopefully, someone will be glad that you did.

Eric Evans
& Kathy Sochia,
Editors

Cover image: Dan Gold / www.unsplash.com

Table of Contents

Dad / Jim Babwe / 1

Dysautonomia / Michael H. Brownstein / 4

What he said / Marietta Calvanico / 5 all these years of hatred / J.J. Campbell / 6 as long as i have lived in the place / J.J. Campbell / 7

At The Stop / Holly Day / 8

Rabat / John Grey / 9

Lover Boy / John Grey / 10

The Man Who Longed To Fly / John Grey / 11

Baptizing the Dead / Robert S. King / 13

In the Living Room of the Dead / Robert S. King / 14

Standing In The Queue / Matt Morris / 15

Perseus / Matt Morris / 16

Heatwave / Matt Morris / 17

Fistful Of Nothing / Matt Morris / 18

Sate on Crayfish / Keith Moul / 20

Reading / Tim Pilgrim / 21

Dad

by Jim Babwe

Suddenly,
they were not gone for the weekend.

Driveway headlight panic and one lucky adrenalin jump sailed me over the cactus garden adjacent to the open window.

I rode my bicycle as fast as I could pedal; past Deb's Burgers-- eventually put out of business by a new McDonald's across the street-- past the Panic Button-- a dive bar where the sign out front promises BEER FUN FOOD GIRLS GAMES.

Dressed in my underwear (tragic briefs, not boxers) I was thankful for summer.

I made record time over that 1.5 miles.

I praised night,
coasted to a stop,
leaned my bike
against the apricot tree, started to open the garage door at exactly the same time her father arrived.

He killed the headlights quickly, didn't turn off the engine.

He said,
Get dressed.
I'll wait here.

On the way to Thrifty Drug Store, he told me he didn't have a dad either,
and yes he was angry, but he said he would get over it.

He said a woman alone should not be expected to teach a boy what it means to be a man.

Before the days when television commercials included the following words-- flatulence, dysfunction, diarrhea, period, and erection-- he taught me a new vocabulary term on the way in to the store.

He showed me where to find these important items and asked if I had any questions.

I wanted to ask him why he wasn't going to kill me, but I didn't.

He told me he didn't have a dad either,
and a mom alone
should not be expected to teach a boy how to be a man.

He asked me if I loved his girl.

The truth was that I did, so I said yes--
and it's still true.

He said,
Her mother and I love her, too.
We would never run away from her, and neither should you.

Dysautonomia

By Michael H. Brownstein

--for KJ, the dog from the shelter

I do not own any talent nor do I know how to pronounce the disease our dog has and when I breathe the air she breathes, I cough in tantrums.
If you offer me this job, I will work hard,
I have lived long and know hard labor.
Each morning, I lift her from her bed carry her outside into the sunlight, never waking anyone else in the household.
I don't know if she wants to walk her hind legs stiff, no longer able to feel pain.
I scrub the floor where she sleeps.
She has a new habit of vomiting liters of urine always waking lighter after she rests.
I can carry her long distances more easily now and I do rehabilitating her with familiar scenery she no longer knows.
She is hardly ever responsive, and though she understands an instinct for water, I must put the water to her mouth and stay with her.
Water gives life, but it also kills.
When she finishes, she rests her face deeper into the bowl.
A few times she almost drowns.
Her stomach barks, she sighs through her nose, and when her mouth opens, she honks the caw of a murder of crows, a skewed foghorn.
I clean her off and keep her warm.
The children ask why isn't she playful and frantic anymore.
This is a question I cannot answer.
She is a stuffed animal with a heartbeat, nothing more.
If you give me this job, I will work hard.
I have the work ethic of the old ones.
Loyalty is not a matter taken lightly.
I believe this is something you too understand.

What he said

By Marietta Calvanico

You told me that we all have moments of quiet desperation

Thoreau said that about life unfulfilled but just so you know my desperation isn't quiet in fact it's very fucking loud

at 3 AM while you sleep deeply and I'm stuck with the din in my head

I think to myself what if I did what if I didn't?

all these years of hatred

by J.J. Campbell

it's the dead skin the eyes of a beautiful soul

the hands across a neck that awaits to die

i have nightmares my father is going to rise from his grave and apologize to me

all these years of hatred taken away from me by the bastard who forgot to remember i existed for the last twenty years

sadly,
my nightmares usually come true

as long as i have lived in the place

by J.J. Campbell

progress is loud and messy

at least that's what i am telling myself as i look around a room that hasn't been cleaned in as long as i have lived in the place of course, i can convince myself of any lie as long as i can really believe it like poet for a career

you're not really obese

someone will want those baseball cards one day and the woman of your dreams is around the next corner

trust me

At The Stop

By Holly Day

I take the dog out to the bus stop to wait for my daughter to come home from school. One of the other mothers has driven to the bus stop, and she sits in her car with the windows rolled up maybe she's listening to music, or just enjoying the quiet.

The dog starts digging at something and I push at her with my foot make her stop, this isn't her yard. She sits down and wags her tail pushes against my leg for comfort. I pet her large, blocky head tell her the bus is coming soon.

I look up and see the woman in the car is watching me, I think. She's wearing mirrored sunglasses and I can't tell if she's watching me or just fallen asleep her head pressed against the window, jaw slightly open as though something I'm doing is really interesting, or maybe she's just slipped into a coma or she's dead.

The school bus pulls up and I wait to see if the woman moves if I have to carefully walk her daughter to the car to see what's wrong if I have to brace her little girl with the horrible news that her mother has just died, right there, sitting in the car while waiting for her to come home. and how wonderful would that be, I think, as I see the woman straighten up unlock the doors of her car with a noisy "click", to be able to say you were such a devoted mother that even though you knew deep in your heart that something was physically wrong, that you should probably go to the doctor instead of the bus stop, that even so you still drove your car the two blocks to the bus stop to wait for the bus to pull up and end your day.

Rabat

By John Grey

We slip down side streets and into a large bazaar.
With hundreds of traders with goods on show, our presence is suddenly not our own.

So many rugs, so many blankets. are unfolded before us, we feel like royalty until we hear the asking price.

We're not in the mood for wooden chess sets, or fake gold bracelets or strange fruits smothered in flies.
We're a little lost that's all.

An old woman in gray sits on a stoop fanning herself with a newspaper.
She points a photograph in our direction.

"My boy", she says. "He's in Paris.
He could welcome you warmly if he was here."
The one thing given away for free in the entire marketplace is her son's warm smile when the camera is pointed at him.

Then, for a dollar, a boy points the way back to our hotel.
Somehow that makes us even on the day.

Lover Boy

By John Grey

As a reputed professional, he has developed a number of virtuoso procedures when approaching women.

His most recent technical innovation involves his way of bypassing the ordinary eye-contact for something involving the full range of the inner being's capabilities, especially the mind,

the tongue of course, even the heart when necessary.

His most recent successes have also involved the exchange of money.
His failures often take the form of a redefinition of failure.

The Man Who Longed To Fly

By John Grey

Allow me world, the aerodynamics that elude me, the wide spread wings that can conquer the air.

And why can't I cheer up the one child crying.
even if it's me.
at age seven.
after a takeoff from a fence that cracked three ribs.

Look at the sky.
Why put it there if my outstretched hands can't touch it.
if my leaps fall painfully short.

Look at the boy
as he scrapes himself off the ground and not for the last time.
I need to rush in.
tell that poor soul that gravity is stacked against him.

So allow me world.
some reward for the bruises.
the blundering dreams. devastated hopes - all those enemies of levitation.

And now. they tell me the last journey I ever undertake will take me six feet under.
Nothing to do with me, of course.
Purely irony's doing.

Baptizing the Dead

By Robert S. King

Graveside ceremonies make heaven rain.
Umbrellas leak and flap like wings in the wind.
Drowning, they give thanks for the downpour of holy water even as faith gasps for air.

A voice chokes on sorrow but defines the fate: How lucky to die when your soul is saved; he is glory-bound already.

The thundering night flashes other possibilities on the wake of mourners gathered to praise his afterlife.
They huddle inside the house the dead abandoned, their vigil candles sputtering from drafts chilling them to the bones, from leaks in the roof under whose mercy they take communion with their faith and fate.

Perseus

By Matt Morris

wore the magic shoes he'd found at the army surplus store for fifteen bucks to the get-together. They weren't really magic, but imitation leather with what looked like wings engraved on the sides. The laces, made of the same waxy orange faux leather, looked cool, but they kept coming undone, so "wacky" Perseus left them untied, dangerously dangling like the tentacles of strange beasts from the deep. When he met Medusa, a tall glass of cabernet shimmering in her hand, she knelt, without so much as a would-you-look-at-that, at his feet to tie his shoes, her glistening locks curling around her shoulders, slithering down her breasts. His red cocktail wiener oozed a spicy marinade from its lanceolate toothpick, bleeding through the thin paper plate that teetered with gorgonzola chunks & black sesame crackers on his lap as he grew hard, so he dared not move. She sized him up in one look—a long, stony gaze.

Luckily, he'd come prepared with protection tucked inside either shoe. Ashtrays of smoldering butts later, Perseus, watching in the motel mirror while Medusa slept, zipped up his pants, slipped on his shoes, tip-toed to the bed, then in a single motion, whipped the cover down & lopped off the Gorgon's head.

Heatwave

By Matt Morris

Days echo days, each begging the question of how long before I drop like a grocery sack, broken eggs frying on the pavement.

Last night, I nearly drove my rust red Mercury off a cliff, trying like a teenager steering with his cock just to be cool.

Fistful Of Nothing

By Matt Morris

Day after day, you mouse through the cramped cubicles' maze to collect your reward at the end of the week, but it's always the same hard cheese.

        Never enough to buy yourself a piece of the dream, although for five easy payments, guarantees

    the disembodied voice booming in your earbuds, the latest gewgaw to set you free can be yours.

    It's a trap,
        stupid,
            a trick,
the old bait & switch.

    Freedom is an exotic dancer at a private club who'll never go home with you no matter how much cheddar you stuff down her thong.

It's all show – like eyeglasses without lenses.

Still
they make you look smart, as if you know you're alive & why.

Sate on Crayfish

By Keith Moul

The northern dominates its lake, makes no claim regarding its pike attributes of length and weight.
See it in your boat, never to yield, testing the line, testing the net, testing the fisher with a might to excite memories lodged forever in the viscera.

The sunny look, the dusky look illuminates its spots like searchlights from inside, burst from its engine.

Return this siren to the cold deep. Revere its home.
Take your craft to another spot clear and reserved to the long face, the muskellunge sated on crayfish.

Reading

by Tim Pilgrim

Famous writers feast on it -- drift in at the last moment, flowing print dress or tweed jacket, wrinkled shirt, hair a mess.

At the podium, they smile kindly, offer excuses for being late -- stopped to watch a clock tower burn, heard it chime out in fright, saw blackened doves take flight.

They reach into purse, ragged pack, paper bag, finally bring out a new volume of their work.

The moment may be near -- first, search pockets for glasses, ask for water, room temp, no ice.

Adjust microphone, tap it, say the book is for sale afterward -- at last, begin reading. Slowly, they mouth each word as if it were the round nub of a chicken bone. They suck out every last bit of marrow.

Contributors

Jim Babwe is a native Californian who lives in Encinitas. Compared to most of the rest of the United States, the weather is almost perfect there and he appreciates that fact. But he is a longtime San Diego Padres fan, and in some ways, that state of affairs compromises the benefits of the good weather with severe, on-going disappointment. The team's won/lost record is about 600 games below the .500 mark since they entered the National League in 1969. Usually, Jim is an optimist, but he's not really optimistic about the Padres going undefeated for three consecutive seasons so they can even up their lifetime won/lost record. He embraces denial as an important survival skill.

Michael H. Brownstein has been widely published throughout the small and literary presses. His work has appeared in The Café Review, American Letters and Commentary, Skidrow Penthouse, Xavier Review, Hotel Amerika, Free Lunch, Meridian Anthology of Contemporary Poetry, Bond Street Review, The Pacific Review, Poetrysuperhighway.com and others. In addition, he has nine poetry chapbooks including The Possibility of Sky and Hell: From My Suicide Book and The Katy Trail, Mid-Missouri, 100 Degrees Outside and Other Poems. He is the editor of First Poems from Viet Nam and head administrator for Project Agent Orange (projectagentorange.com).

Marietta Calvanico lives in Staten Island, NY. After spending a bit more than two decades in advertising/marketing, she now works with her architect husband and has been able to devote more time to writing and music. Her poetry, short fiction and non-fiction have appeared in print publications and on line.

J.J. Campbell was raised by wolves and is currently trapped in suburbia. He's been widely published over the years, most recently at Misfit Magazine, The Beatnik Cowboy, Mad Swirl, Synchronized Chaos and Dodging the Rain. His latest chapbook, the taste of blood on christmas morning, was recently published by Analog Submission Press. You can find him most days on his mildly entertaining blog, evil delights. (<http://evildelights.blogspot.com>).

Holly Day has taught writing classes at the Loft Literary Center in Minneapolis, Minnesota, since 2000. Her poetry has recently appeared in Tampa Review, SLAB, and Gargoyle, and her published books include Walking Twin Cities, Music Theory for Dummies, and Ugly Girl.

John Grey is an Australian poet, US resident. Recently published in the Tau, Studio One and Columbia Review with work upcoming in Leading Edge, Examined Life Journal and Midwest Quarterly.

Robert S. King lives in Athens, GA, where he serves on the board of FutureCycle Press and edits the literary journal Good Works Review. His poems have appeared in hundreds of magazines, including Atlanta Review, California Quarterly, Chariton Review, Hollins Critic, Kenyon Review, Main Street Rag, Midwest Quarterly, Negative Capability, Southern Poetry Review, and Spoon River Poetry Review. He has published eight poetry collections, most recently Diary of the Last Person on Earth and Developing a Photograph of God. His personal website is www.robertsking.info.

Matt Morris is the author of Nearing Narcoma, winner of the Main Street Press Poetry Book Award, and Walking in Chicago with a Suitcase in My Hand, published by Knut House Press. His work has appeared in various magazines and anthologies, such as DMQ, 88, Hunger Mountain, New York Quarterly, and Runes.

Keith Moul's poems and photos are published widely. In August, 2017, Aldrich Press released Not on Any Map, a collection of earlier poems. These poems are from a new work about prairie life through U.S. history, including regional trials, character, and attachment to the land. They are collected now in Voices beneath the Winds, seeking a publisher.

Timothy Pilgrim, Bellingham, Washington, is a Pacific Northwest poet with several hundred acceptances from journals like Seattle Review, Third Wednesday, Windsor Review, Convergence, Windfall and Toasted Cheese. He is author of Mapping Water. His work can be found at timothypilgrim.org.

Books from Ink Publications

- Juggling Fire, Blindfolded*
by Eric Evans
- The Anatomy of a Cratedigger*
by Eric Evans
- The Halo Effect*
by Eric Evans
- Punk Rock for Hip Statisticians*
by Eric Evans
- A Beat Too Long*
by Eric Evans
- Tristero Rapid Post*
by Eric Evans
- Hell or Cleveland*
by Eric Evans
- Godflesh*
by Eric Evans

Broadsides from Ink Publications

(All broadsides are free to download from the Ink Publications website)

- Helicopter Full of Ghosts*
by Matthew Borczon
- How Not To Dress*
by Florine Melnyk
- The King of Water*
by Eric Evans
- Losing Duende*
by Alicia Hoffman
- Every Day of My Life*
by Michael Estabrook
- Geometry for Two*
by Lisa Feinstein
- Lisbon via Boston*
by Eric Evans
- Reap Eat*
by Carly Christiansen
- Good Fortune*
by Alicia Hoffman
- Crows*
by Eric Evans

All titles are available through the Ink Publications website – www.inkpublications.com

The Winter 2018 issue of
The Bond Street Review
will be published in early February. Submissions will be considered beginning on October 1st.
For submission guidelines, please go to www.inkpublications.com